Residential ESS cost vs benefit calculation in Vietnam

Overview

How to design a benefits package for employees in Vietnam?

When designing a benefits package (C&B) for employees in Vietnam, there are benefits required by law that every company must provide to their employees. These are minimum legal requirements, including full insurance, annual leave, public holidays, and mandatory health check-ups. 1. Social Security.

Are employees entitled to statutory benefits in Vietnam?

In Vietnam, all full-time employees are entitled to statutory benefits, including employees on short-term contracts. What about independent contractors?

Independent contractors are classified differently to employees.

How does social security work in Vietnam?

In Vietnam, social security contributions go to three funds: social insurance, health, and unemployment. As an employer, you are responsible for contributing 17.5% of your employee's salary to social insurance, 3% to health insurance, and 1% to unemployment. Your employees are likewise required to contribute 8%, 1.5%, and 1%, respectively.

Do independent contractors qualify for statutory benefits in Vietnam?

Independent contractors are classified differently to employees. However, given recent revisions to the Vietnamese Labor Code, contractors can — in some limited cases — qualify for statutory benefits. You can still choose to offer benefits to any independent contractors that you're working with, but be careful.

What benefits can I offer my Vietnamese workforce?

Some of the most attractive benefits you can offer your Vietnamese workforce include: Vietnam's mandatory insurance contributions only cover health and unemployment. You can supplement these with personal and disability insurance, as well as additional perks and benefits.

Why are Internet allowances important in Vietnam?

As remote and hybrid work models become more common in Vietnam, internet allowances have emerged as a practical support measure. This benefit helps employees maintain stable internet connections for work-related tasks, ensuring productivity and smooth communication.
